FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS

ACLU contacts College officials, campaigns

By T.R. HANRAHAN
EDITOR-IN-CHIEFAnd KAYLEA HUTSON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Nearly two weeks after a campus visit by President George Bush, Missouri Southern is still feeling effects from the detention of demonstrators by state and county law enforcement officials.

During the president's Sept. 11 campaign stop at Southern, a group of individuals holding signs supporting Democratic nominee Bill Clinton were detained in an area separate from the rally. Armed law enforcement officials allegedly forced demonstrators to remain in the area until the rally ended.

Demonstrators have met with a representative of the American Civil Liberties Union and two campus bodies have acted on resolutions condemning the apparent violation of the demonstrators' rights and supporting an inquiry into who was responsible. The ACLU has sent letters to College President Julio Leon, Jasper County Sheriff Bill Pierce, and the campaign headquarters of Bush and Democratic nominee Bill Clinton.

"In Dr. Leon's [letter], we stated our concerns and stated our questions about the College's role in the events in question," said Dick Kurtenbach, executive director of the ACLU of Kansas and Western Missouri.

The letter, which said the incidents "compare more closely to Nazi Germany than to a public college campus," asked Leon to respond "promptly and thoroughly" to several questions. The letter asked Leon:

•Who determined where the designated area for protesters would be?

•Who set the policy for the Jasper County deputies in not allowing persons holding signs to attend the rally, even if they left their signs behind?

•Who ordered the armed escort for those protesters who wished to leave the designated area?

•Why were student protesters not allowed to leave the designated area even to attend classes?

Leon said he planned to answer the letter, but did not elaborate on how he would address its specific questions.

"Obviously, I will respond to the letter as a matter of courtesy," Leon said. "I will probably send them a copy of the memo I sent to faculty and explain the formation of the committee to look into the matter."

The memo, issued Sept. 16, announced the formation of a committee to "study the existing College policies regarding use of campus facilities and recommend changes that may be necessary to ensure achievement and enhancement of the College mission and objectives."

Leon said he did not know how his response to the ACLU letter would be received.

"I don't know if it will be acceptable to whomever," he said. "Someone else will have to act in whatever manner they think is appropriate."

Kurtenbach met Tuesday with several members of Southern's Young Democrats and other individuals who were detained. He said the ACLU is willing to assist those who believe their rights were violated, but any decision to take legal action rests with them.

"It's a serious decision on their part," Kurtenbach said. "It's a serious sort of matter in being considering. I urge them to get back to me as soon as they reach a decision."

"I hope to hear from them soon."

Leon said the ACLU's involvement would not affect the committee's charge or place additional urgency on their report.

"Their mission is still the same," he said. "They will look at the policies and examine them in light of what happened and make recommendations."

Monday, a resolution before the College's Faculty Senate that condemned the detention of demonstrators and applauded the formation of the campus committee failed to receive a majority. The vote was 13-13.

Annetta St. Clair, associate professor of political science and a member of the Senate, said she could not understand the Senate's failure to pass the measure.

"I find myself at a loss to explain it," she said. "I can't even venture a guess. I would like to think that all of our faculty have read the Constitution and particularly the Bill of Rights."

A similar resolution was approved last night by the Student Senate in a 16-15 vote. The resolution, introduced by senior Senator Paul Hood, called the alleged violations of demonstrators' rights "reprehensible" and condemned "those violations in the strongest possible language."

In order to bring the resolution before the Senate for discussion, the body first voted to suspend the rules and allow both first and second readings. Some senators expressed concern that such a statement was inappropriate from the Senate.

"I think some things were worded too strongly," said Chuck Henry, junior senator. "I think there are two main problems. First, I don't know if we should be pointing fingers at organizations for the actions of individuals. Second, I wonder if they are giving this so much attention to promote their own political purposes."

Hood said he was pleased with the Senate's action on the resolution.

"I want to thank everyone who supported it," Hood said. "I also want to thank those who didn't vote for it for making for lively debate."

"We did what the Faculty Senate refused to do. We stood up for something. We didn't cower in fear of President Leon and the College administration like many faculty senators did on Monday."

1993-94 BUDGET

Southern requests 10 % budget hike

College seeks parity with Western

By T.R. HANRAHAN
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Missouri Southern's budget request for the 1993-94 fiscal year seeks to correct what College President Julio Leon calls an unfair situation.

The $31,020,159 budget request is $2,988,161 more than the College's request last year, included in the request is a one-time adjustment of $2,928,888 in base funding to bring Southern into line with Missouri Western State College in St. Joseph.

"For too long, Missouri Southern has been getting the least amount of appropriation per full-time equivalent student than any other four-year state college or university in Missouri," Leon said at last Friday's meeting of the Board of Regents. "It is high time that the quality efforts of our institution be properly recognized with a fair amount of funding in relation to our sister institutions."

Leon said the College will step up efforts to secure funding necessary to maintain high quality and equal to that received by similar institutions.

"Missouri Southern has not received a fair appropriation per FTE in the last 10 years," he said. "We have always mentioned our improvements and efforts but have never formally put that into a request. I think it is time we do that officially."

Leon said money from the request would go primarily into the instructional portion of the budget.

"We could offer many more sections and hire more full-time faculty and support personnel," Leon said. "Then there is the need for updated equipment in Reynolds Hall, equipment for the support staff, and we could improve the technology available in the Library."

Leon said Southern normally receives 65 to 70 percent of the approved budget. If fully funded, this year's request would mean a state appropriation of about $20.3 million next year (65 percent). That figure would be an increase of nearly 11 percent over last year's $12.8 million appropriation.

The College also is seeking $2.2 million for salaries, programs, equipment, and library expenditures. Other requests include $440,000 to expand Southern's international emphasis, $500,000 to expand course offerings to accommodate core curriculum goals, $574,284 for telecommunications equipment, $919,000 for science equipment, $112,000 for business school curriculum improvements, $373,000 for retention efforts, $177,500 for assessment, and $195,000 for full implementation of writing across the curriculum.

The numbers were consistent with the expectations of College officials.

"Because of the demographics, we initially expected a decline in around 50-80 students," College President Julio Leon said. "There were fewer students

WEBSTER COMMUNICATIONS AND SOCIAL SCIENCE BUILDING

Webster family to cut ribbon on building

Dedication ceremonies slated for today

By KAYLEA HUTSON
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Ceremonies to officially designate Missouri Southern's newest addition as the Webster Communications and Social Science Building are scheduled for 11:30 a.m. today in the building's first floor auditorium.

The building is named in honor of the late Sen. Richard Webster (R-Canthage), who was instrumental in establishing Missouri Southern.

While most state legislators were invited to attend the ceremony, only two will be in attendance.

Rep. Chris Kelly (D-Columbia), Sen. Roger Wilson (D-Columbia), Attorney General William Webster, and Gov. John Ashcroft were also extended special invitations.

"We asked them because they were very instrumental in helping us during the appropriation process," said Dr. John Tiede, senior vice president.

Wilson and Webster will be in attendance today; however, Kelly and Ashcroft have declined the invitation.

"The governor will be on an economic development trip, meeting with companies interested in coming to Missouri," said Bob Ferguson, Ashcroft's deputy chief of staff. "He would like to attend, but it just fell on the wrong date for us."

Ferguson said the development trip had been planned for at least six months.

In addition to Wilson and Webster, Board of Regents President Frank Dunaway and Regents Gilbert Roper, Douglas Crandall and Keith Adams will be present. Richard Massa, department head of communications and Dr. David Tate, department head of social science, will attend the ceremony as honored guests.

Mickey Brown and L. M. Magruder, members of the Missouri Coordinating Board for Higher Education, also will attend.

Ed Wimmer, the architect for the project, and Ted Smith, president of Dewitt & Associates, the construction company, also will attend as honored guests.

Following a welcome by College President Julio Leon, a short video of MSTV interview segments of the late Sen. Richard Webster will be shown.

Tiede said the video also will feature some footage of the construction process.

A symbolic ribbon cutting will be held with William Webster and Richard Webster, Jr. holding each end of the ribbon, and Janet Webster cutting the ribbon.

After the ceremony, a buffet luncheon will be held in the Spiva Art Gallery for invited guests. Tours of the new facilities will then be held for the public.

While the Webster Building will be christened, the campus residence halls will not be receiving names.

"I think we will name them over in time," Tiede said. "I'm not sure whether we will name all of them at once or individually. But it is still a long-range goal."

About 150 persons are expected to attend.

FALL ENROLLMENT

Student numbers down, credit hours see increase

Fall enrollment at Missouri Southern could be described as an up and down proposition.

Although the total enrollment of 5,889 students is down by 122 from last year, total credit hours generated are up by 367. Students have enrolled in 66,194 credit hours as compared to 65,827 last fall.

CAMPUS SECURITY

Students criticize Webster parking

By P.J. GRAHAM
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Some people at Missouri Southern have found the new Webster Communications and Social Science Building's parking lot more of a hindrance than a help.

The parking area, located behind the building, has been the source of student grievances since signs reserving the lot for faculty and staff were placed in mid-September. Some students were ticketed for parking in the lots before the signs were placed.

"It was designated for faculty and staff all along," said Bill Boyer, chief of campus security. "We did not get the signs up until Sept. 16."

Bob Boelter, director of the physical plant, said the signs were not up earlier because of all the moving activities going on at the time.

"It was just a flurry of activity," he said. "One of the things that didn't get done as quickly as the [posting of signs in] that lot."

Boyer said he was going to ask the traffic appeals committee to excuse the tickets given before the signs were erected. But some students, ticketed for parking in the lot after the signs were up, believe they were not given adequate notice concerning the use of the lot.

"I parked there for two weeks," said Denise Umfleet, junior graphic arts major. "And after parking there for two weeks, you don't look for signs."

"I thought they needed to give me some warning before starting to hand out the tickets," said Steven Kyser, junior business major. "It used to be fine for everybody to park there."

Some students believe the signs now in place are not sufficient, since the first visible sign for a motorist going south on Duquesne Road is after the first entrance to the parking lot. So a motorist turning into the lot at the first entrance may not see the signs telling the parking restrictions.

"Nobody knew, nobody saw it," Liz Hogan, music education major, said of the signs. "We don't really know where to park exactly."

Boyer said there have been five to six appeals about parking tickets from the lot behind Webster this month. Umfleet also noted students had to pay $1 just to appeal tickets received.

Another traffic concern brought about by the opening of the Webster building is the shift in parking.

"It's a new building," Boyer said. "Some departments have been shifted; it's an all new situation. The officers are out there trying to move the traffic through."

"We ask [the public's] indulgence and patience as we try to make this good for everyone."

RESIDENCE HALLS

College beefs up late night security

By DAWN ADAMSON
STAFF WRITER

Residence hall security at Missouri Southern has now been extended from late night through early morning hours.

Increasing crime rate statistics and concern for the safety of students and personnel on campus are the reasons for the placement of a security officer at the residence halls, said Bill Boyer, chief of campus security.

Security officer Roderick Sly patrols the residence hall area from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m.

"He served for seven years in the Marine Corps, much of that time as an embassy guard," Boyer said. "We had already hired him before we knew we were going into this aspect [of security]. We hired another person to take his (Sly's) place."

LONG-RANGE PLANS

Student computers a possibility

By KELLY KIRK
STAFF WRITER

Central Missouri University is installing a new, one-year plan this year. Each of the new Diemer Hall will be equipped with an Apple Macintosh computer, and basic software. Computers are connected to a campus-wide network, which allow the students access to the campus mainframe.

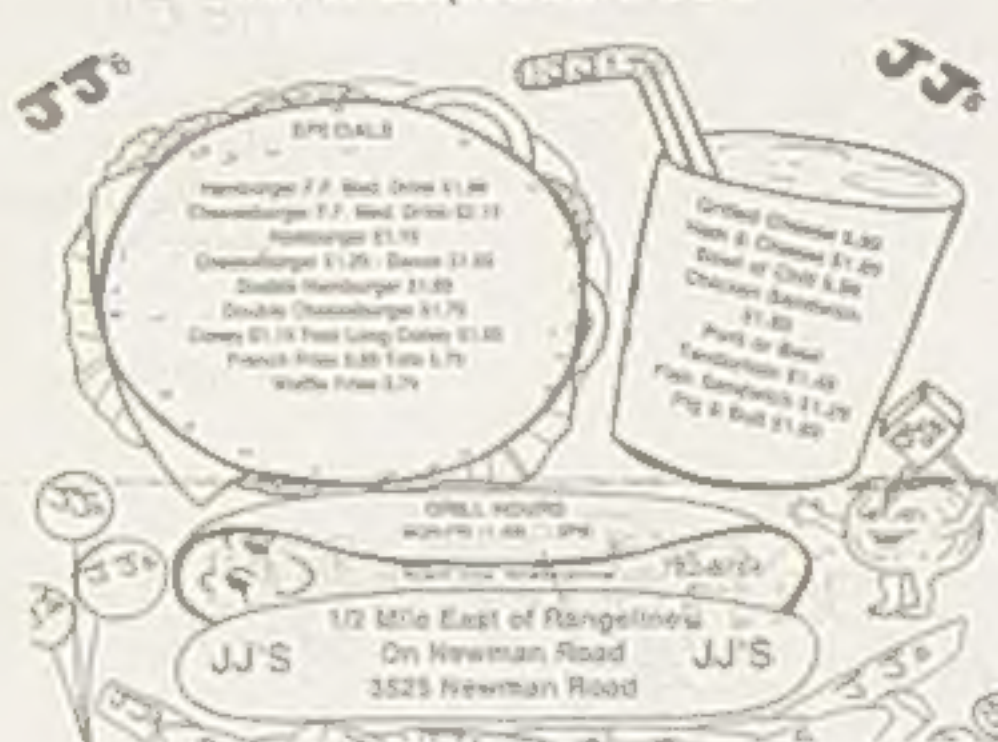

Whether Missouri Southern enjoys this same technological advantage is in question right now.

"That's in our fairly long-range plans," said Dr. John Tiede, vice president. "A fiber optic cable for the campus is one project we're trying to get by the state. That's really one of our top priorities in terms of and maintenance. That would enable us to tie all the buildings together, and that would even include the dormitory area."

College officials said an ongoing project like this would be costly. "The preliminary estimate is about $1.5 million," Tiede said.

The problems of funding such a project make it more of a possibility than a definite plan, said Eamey, vice president for academic and information services.

ALUMNI REUNIONS

JJC class to celebrate 50-year anniversary during homecoming

By SHERI RULE
STAFF WRITER

The Joplin Junior College class of 1942 will celebrate its 50-year reunion in conjunction with homecoming this year.

Kreta Gladden, director of alumni affairs, said reunions such as this have been successful in the past.

"We've tried holding different-year reunions, such as five-year, 10-year, and 20-year," Gladden said, "but it seems that the 30 year and 50 year reunions have been the most successful."

JJC was founded in 1937, and became a four year college in 1965. It was officially recognized as Missouri Southern State College in August 1967.

"On the 50-year reunions we've given the classes the option of when they want to have them, and most of the classes have them in conjunction with our homecoming," Gladden said. "They give ideas, and plan which activities they want to be a part of and what they would like to do."

Reunion activities over the homecoming weekend include an Alumni Reception from 7 to 9 p.m., Oct. 30 at the Joplin Holiday Inn, the homecoming parade at 10 a.m., Oct. 31; on Main Street in downtown Joplin, the Ali Alumni Luncheon held at noon on Oct. 31 in the Connor Ballroom of Billingsly Student Center to recognize the outstanding alumnus, and the classes of '42 and '62. Reservations are required for the luncheon.

The homecoming football game between the Lions and the Northwest Missouri State University Bearcats will be held at 2 p.m., Oct. 31. The outstanding alumnus will be recognized as part of halftime activities.

The homecoming dance from 9 p.m. to midnight in Holiday Inn's Oakwood Ballroom will be a celebration for Missouri Southern alumni, students, faculty, staff, and friends of the College. It is sponsored by the Alumni Association and Campus Activities Board.

"Sunday, they have a breakfast at the Holiday Inn, and that concludes the activities they have planned," Gladden said.

Alumni Association President Bob Higgins was a member of the class of '42, and is chairman of the reunion.

"I think we've had a pretty good response," Higgins said. "Because of the war years and closeness of this particular class, I think that will have an impact on attendance.

"The fact that most of us at this reunion are from the depression era works to give the class unity. The basic principles and fundamentals of education were very strong then. I'm not sure how much has changed, but I believe that excellent instruction is important and should continue," Higgins said.

Gladden said this reunion has special emphasis for Higgins.

"Bob has been a terrific help, and he has been involved with the campus for a long time," Gladden said. "This reunion is probably especially exciting for him."

For more information about alumni activities or the 30-or 50-year reunion, persons may contact the Alumni Office at Ext. 396.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION

Nelson replaces Oldham as department head

By SUSAN HOSKINS
CAMPUS EDITOR

Moving up the departmental ladder quickly was the last thing Dr. J. Dirk Nelson expected to do.

"When I was in graduate school and looking for a teaching position, my adviser mentioned an administrative position would be something I could do in a few years," he said. "I never thought it would be this soon."

Nelson, new head of the physical education department, replaced Dr. Max Oldham this summer.

"Dr. Oldham had been serving the College in this capacity for several years," he said. "He felt he would like to devote himself to teaching full-time rather than teaching plus administrative work. He wanted to strictly be a teacher."

Nelson hopes to implement some changes in the department.

"I don't know if I plan on doing things differently," he said. "We in the department have some ideas we would like to see come into reality."

"We would like people across campus to develop an appreciation for the services we provide for students."

Since positioning Sly, there have been no crime reports.

"The officer, upon arrival, establishes contact with the staff assistants and what have you," Boyer said. "He then begins the lock down of the apartments (residence halls)—locking the front doors."

Sly reopens the residence halls at 6 a.m.

"His station is actually in the office area of North Hall. Following that, it is mainly his choice to be outside on patrol," he said. "There's a safety check at South Hall which he does at least every two hours."

Why Senate?

This is incredible. On Monday, Missouri Southern's Faculty Senate had the opportunity to adopt a resolution supporting freedom of expression and applauding College President Julio Leon for his formation of a committee to protect those rights.

It didn't.

Instead, the Senate deadlocked at 13-13 and watched the train of sanity and responsibility leave the station without them. Fortunately, one College governmental body was aboard. The Student Senate voted 16-15 last night to adopt a similar (and much stronger) resolution condemning rights violations which clearly occurred during the visit of President George Bush on Sept. 11.

While we find it commendable that the Student Senate voted to make a statement in favor of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, we find our jaws hanging open in incredulity over how so many student senators and at least half the Faculty Senate could not bring themselves to do the right thing.

The Faculty Senate resolution which was unacceptable to 13 members of that august body reads:

"The Faculty Senate expresses its dismay that on Sept. 11, 1992, faculty and students seeking to express their views in an orderly manner at an open meeting on campus were denied this right and forcibly detained by state and county law enforcement officials. The restraints placed on their speech and movement threaten the spirit of free inquiry, which is central to the College's mission.

"The Senate affirms that, at open meetings on this campus, it is entirely inappropriate to permit the expression of only certain viewpoints and not others. Accordingly, the Senate applauds President Leon's appointment of a committee whose recommendations, we hope, will ensure that, in the future, open meetings will be conducted in a manner consistent with the College's dedication to the spirit of free inquiry."

Pretty lame, huh? We thought so, too. Apparently not.

Thirteen persons voted against the resolution and the presiding officer did not break the tie.

An old expression says a tie is like kissing your sister. This tie is like kissing the Bill of Rights goodbye.

How can those of you who opposed this document look at yourselves in the mirror and say you support freedom of speech?

Incredible. Simply incredible.

This was a spiritual experience

EDITOR'S COLUMN

"I was in ecstasy. It seemed as if every song they played was my favorite. I kept leaning over to a friend of mine saying, 'I forgot this one; this is awesome.'"

By JEFFREY SLATTON
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Spiritual. In one word, that's the only possible way to describe Sunday's U2 concert at Busch Stadium in St. Louis.

Even though I had to drive 290 miles there and 290 back, it was worth it. It was worth every penny of the $30 ticket. Anyone who had a chance to go and didn't, is a complete and utter idiot. I don't care if you like the music or not. The show and stage extravaganza were well-worth the price of admission.

Behold though, if you missed it. You've gotten another chance. U2 will play Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City in a couple of weeks. If you miss this one, you've missed the concert event of the 90s. It's a shorter drive, a bigger stadium, and Public Enemy may even perform.

Public Enemy was supposed to be one of the opening acts for the St. Louis date, but for whatever reason was canceled in favor of Big Audio Dynamite II. Rumors about this have been flying around St. Louis like crazy. The one I heard most often was that Anheuser-Busch didn't want them playing at Busch Stadium. I don't know exactly why, but that's what I heard. B.A.D. II opened with the Disposable Heroes of Hypocrisy. Both acts were good, but the large crowd seemed unfamiliar with the music.

U2 hit the stage about 9 p.m. and did not disappoint. At least three dozen television monitors showed President George Bush digitally enhanced singing the Queen classic "We will rock you."

The Irish band opened with several songs off their most recent album Achilles Heel. While one huge monitor showed guitarist The Edge playing live, monitors flashed words, phrases, pictures, and other images to the crowd. It was hard to walk band playing, because the other video images were so eye catching.

Coming into the show, MTV had reported the band was not playing as much of the music off previous albums. But, when they played my favorite, "Rattle and Hum," I was in ecstasy. It seemed as if every song played was my favorite. I kept leaning over to a friend of mine saying, "I forgot this one; this is awesome."

"Sunday, Bloody Sunday," "Where The Streets Have No Name," "Angel Of Harlem," "Bullet Through The Sky," "With Or Without You," and countless others including "Pride (In The Name Of Love)" which the image of Martin Luther King appeared on the many monitors. The crowd exploded in applause when the King video rolled.

They even performed the song they did with King during the movie Rattle and Hum, "When Love Comes To Town." In this version, however, The Edge sang B.B.'s part of the lyrics.

Adam Clayton was steady as usual on bass. Bono moved around the stage a bit more. Bono and The Edge might let him play in some of their antic religious games on stage. Larry Mullen, Jr. was also slapping the drums underneath all the television monitors.

For those of you coming back to school after the age of 23, this is likely to sound familiar. And for those of you who have ever encountered Zig Zag or his literature, you will agree with his premise that 85 percent of the solution and of success is attitude. I will add one more factor: knowing where to go for information.

Let's identify the fears. One is fear of being the only old person going back to school, no matter what the age. The good news is that now more than half of our students and of those nationwide fall into the non-traditional category. Hand-in-hand with this fear are those of the brain not being able to function and of the freshman straight out of high school raising the curve. Quite frankly, if you have raised any amount of children (which Mamie McCullough compares with "organizing grasshoppers"), your brain is probably in overdrive and on some days you may feel that you could outsmart God. As to curve-raising, the younger student may be fresher on some subject matter, but his experiences can't hold a candle in reality, and neither group is going to raise the curve.

The Booger of All Fears seems to be math, especially on the ACT test. Granted, some of it looks like photos of Egyptian tombstones, but if a person has never had the chance to take courses that he currently can't even spell, he still can contact NALA for help, or know that a goodly number of Missouri Southern math faculty members have super prescriptions for math anxiety really work.

Surprisingly, the thought of giving a speech in front of a class has a paralyzing effect for some, even for a traditional student. Fortunately, the Communication Department has a warm and friendly list of ideas, including the request for a person to tell about two worst things he ever ate. (The last confession heard on this one were "snake" and a "fly.") could give a speech be worse than that?

The monster for some is the computer, especially if they have never even touched one. The vision of something breaking, or of smoke pouring out of pores, or of sheer frustration in not knowing where the button is to turn it on. This includes the puer system in the library, and the horrifying notion that the old card catalog system has vanished. Counseling Center, the Library and the Learning Center all have people and/or papers to help, but directions on how to touch it, to disks a person himself in the computer that will show him what to press and how to do it so that it won't snort at him. (The last one has optional musical accompaniment as a pacifier.)

Some fear not knowing how to study, take notes, take tests, and many never really had much, if any, training prior to twelfth grade.

Vote for Frankie

You @#$% liberal slime!! How dare you try to express your lives as our fascist, extremist, new right winging, ultra-conservative, Pat Robertson worshiping, cosmopolitan believing, women should stay at home and have babies, family value rally. By not allowing you to express yourselves in our pure rally we were protecting our own from being infected by your hippy, drug approving, pro-abortion, philosophy thinking ideals. Senate vote a bad example

I am deeply disappointed and saddened. A few hours ago a resolution in response to the events of September 11 was brought before the Faculty Senate. The resolution expresses dismay that freedom of expression was denied to some on our campus during President Bush's appearance; it also applauds President Leon's appointment of a committee charged with making recommendations to insure that no similar violation of rights will occur here in the future. This resolution did not pass.

Appalled, incredulous, I find myself floundering for an explanation. How could my colleagues fail to support this resolution unanimously? I feel the senate has missed an opportunity to be a voice — to clearly articulate and affirm what is arguably our most fundamental constitutional right. There are times when silence is complicity, and this is one of those times. I feel ashamed. I feel we have set a sorry example for our students, to whom I apologize.

Chart should check its facts

Recently you published an article about the C.A.B. movies and it was much appreciated. What was not appreciated were the misquotes, incorrect information, and giving our vice president a new last name. There were five mistakes in the article.

I was quoted as saying "Kids up through high school age get in free and it's only 25 cents for everyone else. We also sell candy for 50 cents..." These were two different topics being put together in one incorrect quote. What I said was, "Kids up to the age of high school get in free for the movie Beauty and the Beast." They do not get in free for all the movies.

The part of the article that really upset me quoted me as saying "...and it's only 25 cents for everyone else. We also sell candy for 50 cents." It upsets me because I said that tickets are 50 cents and candy is 25 cents. I was even re-interviewed by another Chart writer who asked me if the quote was correct. I told her it was not correct and she told me she would make the correction. It obviously did not get corrected.

Two of the other mistakes were the misspelling of our vice president's name. Her last name is Bledsoe, not Blades. If people want to stop by the C.A.B. office they need to go to room 100 in the Billingsly Student Center, not room 110.

Some suggestions to help stop these kinds

The Kurils: Disputed islands

Kuril Islands (pronounced KOO-ri) stretch 650 miles from north Japan to Siberia.

JAPAN, RUSSIA DISPUTE

Kuril islands center of fighting

THE ECONOMIST

Diplomats in Japan have grown old with the issue: the country's demand for the return of four islands in the Kurils, seized by the Soviet Union in 1945, in the closing days of the second world war.

With the Russian president, Boris Yeltsin, expected in Tokyo on Sept. 13 for a four-day visit, officials of the Japanese foreign ministry again prepared to put their case for regaining the islands. But at the last moment Yeltsin postponed his trip until December, possibly indefinitely. It seems he could not stomach another discussion about the islands. In bringing them up yet again the Japanese may have overplayed their hand.

Japan has insisted that it will not discuss the economic aid Russia desperately wants until the issue of the islands is resolved. The result has been to back Yeltsin into a corner. Any surrender of territory would be attacked by his nationalist opponents.

An opinion poll published in Moscow said 60 percent of Russians oppose returning the islands. In an interview on Tokyo television on Sept. 5 Yeltsin said, in effect, he would not be surrendering the islands during his visit.

Yeltsin's snub to Japan by calling off the trip is a blow for the Japanese foreign ministry. Recently it has been playing down talk of an immediate settlement. Suggestions have been made that Japan would be content if the Russians conceded sovereignty of the islands without withdrawing immediately.

But there is no hint that Japan is prepared to abandon its quest, even though polls suggest most Japanese people do not care much about the islands.

Neither does Japan have an unchallengeable legal claim to the islands. The foreign ministry likes to produce seventeenth-century maps of the area showing the islands were then Japanese. It dismisses claims by the Russians that they used to tax the islanders as "some Cossacks collecting furs."

More tellingly, in 1951 Japan included two of the islands, Etorofu and Kunashiri, in a formal renunciation of its claim to the Kurils. In 1956 it was prepared to settle the islands issue in return for Shikotan and the Habomai rocks. But this was when the cold war was at its coldest. America wanted to keep the Soviet Union and Japan at loggerheads. The secretary of state, John Foster Dulles, told the Japanese to renew their claims.

Development threatens ecology, endangered species on islands

By TIMOTHY LANGE
EARTH MATTERS

Russian scientists are trying to gather Japanese help in heading off potential environmental devastation in the Kuril Islands.

The four islands, which the Soviet Union took over at the end of World War II and Japan wants returned, are home to more than 40 endangered species of plants and a major stopover for the Japanese crane and other migrating birds. They are rich in natural resources, with extensive forests and abundant marine life.

But inefficient logging practices and overfishing are harming the islands' ecosystems, according to the Japan Environment Monitor. Moreover, the collapse of the Soviet Union has increased pressure for further development as efforts are made to shift the economy into a free-market model.

If, for instance, Russia maintains control, it is probable that the government, in its eagerness for foreign currency, will begin to sell fishing rights to other resources. Should the Kurils revert to Japan, on the other hand, some Japanese countries already have plans to quickly move in and develop the area with hotels, beach resorts, golf courses and the like.

To avoid these consequences, Sergey Sheveiko, director of the World Waters Institute, proposes converting the islands into an international environmental zone for eco-tourism and eco-friendly businesses.

Etorofu and Kunashiri.

The Americans still formally support Japan's claim. But when the Japanese prime minister, Kiichi Miyazawa, last visited Washington he was told to give Yeltsin a break. The Americans are far more interested in Japan helping Russia economically than they are about the islands.

CIGARETTE SMOKING

Countries raise taxes to discourage bad health habits

Britain, Canada among countries assessing heavy levies on tobacco

By HAL KANE
EARTH MATTERS

Smokers who walk into a store in Norway looking for cigarettes will find themselves paying more than ever—a pack of 20 cigarettes now costs almost $6 because the government has built a $3.93 tax into the price. The Danish government has levied a $3.64 tax on each pack. In Canada and Britain, cigarette taxes exceed $3 a pack.

These hefty tariffs have taken cigarette taxes to a new level and have a new motive behind them—they are intended not only to raise money, as was the case in the past, but also to dramatically change a personal habit that is straining public health budgets.

The idea seems to be working. In New Zealand, where the price of a pack of cigarettes nearly doubled between 1980 and 1991, due to a tax increase of $1.97, the number of cigarettes purchased annually dropped from 4,100 per person to just over 1,500. The United Kingdom achieved similar reductions in smoking rates through cigarette tax hikes until the late 1980s. When the country cut cigarette taxes 15 percent overall between 1987 and 1990, smoking rates rose more than two percent overall and by 25 percent among people under 18 years of age. The jump in rates occurred despite an anti-smoking campaign directed at adolescents through the mass media.

The latest report of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Ga., compiled much of the research that has been done on the effectiveness of cigarette taxes. Fifteen studies in various industrial countries have shown that by hiking the price of cigarettes 10 percent, governments can reduce smoking by about four percent, on average, the CDC says.

For teenagers, the positive impact of heavy taxes is even greater: a 10 percent higher cost translates into 10 percent less smoking. These declines in smoking take place despite the addictive nature of tobacco.

Anti-smoking advocates, public health professionals and government officials concerned with tight budgets see cigarette taxes as a promising way to relieve soaring medical costs and growing demands for hospital care. Tobacco, once linked primarily with lung cancer, is now known to generate more cardiovascular disease than cancer.

Heart attacks, hypertension, strokes, aneurysms, pneumonia, bronchitis, emphysema, influenza, pediatric diseases, and cancer of the mouth, esophagus, pancreas, larynx, bladder, and kidney are among the potentially fatal health consequences of tobacco. These illnesses are blamed by the CDC for more than 434,000 U.S. deaths in 1988 and a staggering number of hospital visits and bills.

According to the American Cancer Society, smoking-related disease will kill about 10 percent of the 250 million people living in industrial countries.

In the United States, almost 1,000 non-smokers die each week from exposure to secondhand tobacco pollutant in this country, says Dr. Stanton A. Glantz of the University of California at San Francisco.

This heavy health toll may explain the lack of resistance to tobacco taxes, even at a time when proposals to increase other types of taxes, like those on oil and personal income, amount to political suicide. Polls commissioned by anti-smoking groups in Ontario, Canada have found public support

Littering could turn our campus into a landfill

Has bottles, plastic wrappers, paper products, aluminum cans... seems like a good list of things to recycle enabling our country to save valuable dollars, energy, and resources. Instead, this list records the various things I saw littered across the campus this morning. The sun rising into a cloudless sky, robins darting from tree to tree, flowers shedding the morning dew, and a discarded

McDonald's cup wilting near the sidewalk - what's wrong with this picture?

Littering is a problem at Southern. On the campus lawn, in the parking lots, and especially around the dorms, trash is collecting in abundance. This cast aside rubbish is ecologically detrimental and unsightly, but most of all it's a disappointing commentary on the students, faculty, and staff of MSSC.

Two simple vices cause this problem: laziness and apathy. The required effort between taking a Twinkie wrapper to the trash can on the way to class and dropping that wrapper in the parking lot is negligible, yet so many people opt for the latter—laziness. Others simply do not care if "MSC" overflows with their garbage. Their indifference affects others, and that ought to be considered. Every can thrown down in apathy becomes a can someone else must look at, step over, or pick up.

The solution to the littering problem is simple and painless: Find a trash can and use it.

Let's all do our part in preventing our College from becoming Missouri Southern State Landfill.

Democrats becoming accustomed to insane banter

It is understandable that most Democrats would feel it is acceptable to invite someone to be killed. It's also understandable that they think every event is a debate. No doubt either, that they would go to an event that someone had arranged, and expect to be killed.

It's understandable because over the past 36 years, the Democrats have become accustomed to being tried in homes where a host would think nothing of insulting them. For 20 years derelicts have been dropping in on them unexpectedly and telling them how things should be done.

Ever since Hubert H. Humphrey's warning against putting "that nonsense" of homosexual rights in the party platform was ignored, the Democratic Party has been inundated with psychopathic personalities. They cry, then intimidate. They beg, they mock, then threaten, pulling and tugging at the emotions. They demand and manipulate, taking advantage of a healthy person's politeness and normal desire to please. The only way to please them, however, is to share their illness. The Democrats have become so accustomed to this insane banter, that they casually slough it off as "peer pressure," and excuse themselves for doing drugs and voting the party line.

This is what has pushed Democrats to adopting the policy that morality can be legislated; though popular vote can decide right from wrong. These are the standards that allowed Hitler to be so successful, he could make anything popular. This new moral code of the Democrats is the morality of the self-centered. The "I want what I want" school of philosophy. If there isn't the intelligence and/or morality to prevent pregnancy, then forge on to smash the fetus and call it the same thing. "I want my choices I threw away when I couldn't help myself."

Democrats think there is an "easy" way for them to become

Republican, if someone would just tell them how. They always look for simple answers, but it takes years of discipline to change one's life from a series of petty arguments into an exhilarating indulgence in living. Next, the salvation to find a center of existence outside the "self." Then, if one has the sense to comprehend that the rantings of the insane are not credentials for prescribing drugs, the Republicans have plenty of room to accommodate a reasonable, serious citizen.

training prior to twelfth grade. Here is where orientation classes can help, and if a person has slipped through the system's cracks and missed this, the Counseling Center has handouts with tips on how to accomplish these goals. Also, the LION'S Guide, the book used in these classes, can be purchased at the bookstore, and has a wealth of other information in it as well.

Fear of failure is not uncommon among non-trads, and often along with it goes a feeling of low self-worth, many times contributed to by others. Too often, folks have heard the phrases, "You're too dumb to go to college," or "You'll NEVER be able to do math, so you might as well forget school," or

"Why should you go to college—your place is here." BOO, HISS! We've seen hundreds who have had the courage to go anyway, and among those, we have found some with poor vision problems that can be corrected, workable disabilities, and attitudinal barriers, but no lack of intelligence, and many others, who with a little love and attention, have reached their goals, even if it meant taking Math 20 three times.

Southern is known for its positive attitude, and with each solution to the aforementioned fears, this ingredient is still the one that carries the most weight in making it all work. It can work for you, too!

One highlight occurred as all four members gathered on the satellite stage 30 rows into the crowd to play a couple of acoustical songs.

Bono was perfect with his singing. Though the Busch Stadium walls produced a bad echo, his voice was right on. He produced the biggest roar of the night when he shouted out, "Sunday, Bloody Sunday" before singing the classic song.

The stage, the lights, the monitors, the special effects, the cars, the music, everything was perfect. It was more than a religious experience. To those fans who attended, it was truly spiritual.

Red Cross sets goal for blood drive at 85 units

Association sponsoring event Monday

By KRISTA CURRY
STAFF WRITER

On Monday, Sept. 28, the American Red Cross will be holding a blood drive from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Keystone Room on the third floor of Billingsly Student Center.

"All healthy people from the ages of 17 to 76 and who weigh at least 110 pounds are eligible to give blood," said Anna Smith, field representative of the Greater Ozark Regional Blood Center. "We need 250 to 350 units of blood per day and we're supplying 48 hospitals in 39 counties. It is extremely important.

"We put blood drives together a year ahead of time so we know we have blood available at the hospital."

"It needs to be available 24 hours a day. We're preplanning for the unexpected, but we have to have blood available or often times individuals will not survive if they are bleeding excessively."

The goal for the drive this year is 85 units of blood.

"September is a month where blood is extremely low due to Labor Day and schools getting back in session," Smith said. "Missouri Southern's drive is helping us make a recovery and getting us back on a comfortable level."

Smith also said that donating blood is a clinically sterile procedure. The blood bag, used for storing blood, is brand new and the needle is used once and then destroyed.

"Once the needle is inserted, it takes 8 to 10 minutes to fill the blood bag, and it holds a little less than a pint," she said. "Your body will begin replenishing the fluids immediately."

The drive not only saves lives, but it also provides blood donors with a brief health physical.

"We run batteries on blood for such things as hepatitis, HIV, syphilis, and leukemia," said

Smith. "If there is a problem with the blood, the donor will be notified."

"We want blood donors to know that the process is safe and that there is no fear of disease. We need the support and we're looking forward to the drive."

The Student Nurse Association sponsors the drive.

"Student nurses do a lot of work to make the drive a success," said Chris Elner, Student Nurse Association adviser. "They get donations from different stores for refreshments, they put up posters, and help out at the drive."

"I hope we have a good turnout. The Red Cross needs the blood," Sophomore biology major Ryan Curry said giving blood is a way to help someone in need.

"You never know when blood might save a life," Baker, sophomore chemistry and biology major.

"Giving blood is a wonderful effort because you never know when somebody may need that somebody might be you," Marc Essary, senior communications major.

Smith said the need for blood continues to go on.

"Sometime in our lifetime we will be exposed to needing or knowing someone else who needs blood. It is a fact and there is no substitute."

Lambda becomes Alpha Sigma Alpha
Southern sorority goes national after 19 yearsBy LESLIE KARR
STAFF WRITER

Becoming a national sorority became a reality for the former Lambda Beta Phi chapter.

A ceremony was held at 1 p.m. Sunday on the third floor of the Billingsly Student Center to recognize the former social sorority Lambda Beta Phi into the national sorority Alpha Sigma Alpha. Diane James, vice-president of finance at the national Alpha Sigma Alpha office, and Lisa Tait, Alpha Sigma Alpha headquarters executive, led the ceremony. Representatives from the Pittsburg State University and Southwest Missouri State University chapters also were in attendance.

The Lambda Beta Phi sorority was established as a local sorority in 1973. Members have attempted to become a national sorority for three years.

"Rush week meant more to us last week than it ever has before," said Angela Moss, junior economic finance major and president of Alpha Sigma.

"As soon as we hit 30 girls in our sorority, we were able to go national. Rush is always important, but now it is even more important."

In order to be termed a national sorority instead of a local sorority, there must be at least three other chapters.

"With a national sorority you have someone backing you up," Moss said. "It's a stronger base to do things which makes it an all together stronger organization."

Recent pledges into the sorority said the fact that the former Lambda Beta Phi was becoming national didn't influence their decision to join it.

"I just really loved the girls," said Stephanie Inman, freshman psychology major and Alpha Sigma Alpha pledge. "I am excited that we are now national, but as pledges we didn't really know much about becoming a national sorority. Now that we are pledged, we are learning a lot more about it and are looking forward to the experience."

According to Moss, it's easier to start a local sorority and in later join a national sorority than to begin as a national sorority.

"We were able to make up our own laws and constitution," said Moss. "These need to be approved by the campus, but it's easier in the long run. It's also easier for a national sorority to come in and incorporate the local sorority into their organization. We already had interested members and leadership."

Changes will take place in procedures.

"We will be about the same," Moss said. "We aren't changing the girls, only allowing ourselves to do things with other groups of girls. It will be stricter. Before we only reported to ourselves. Now anything we want to do we must first report to our national office. This will help us tremendously."

Wither Goodman, senior marketing major and member of Alpha Sigma Alpha, said joining the national sorority will benefit her sorority and hopefully the Southern Greek system as a whole.

"We are all excited about being nationally affiliated because it will be more of a broadening experience," Goodman said. "We will be able to make acquaintances with sisters from different colleges and participate in activities we were unable to do as a local chapter."

"Hopefully, because we now have another national chapter on campus, other national sororities will want to come to Southern, allowing us to have a larger Greek system on campus."

PLASTIC PROCLAMATION

Alpha Sigma Alpha showed pride in their sorority by cupping the fence near the police station Monday. The chapter, formerly Lambda Beta Phi, recently became Southern's newest national sorority.

CAMPUS MINISTRY

Koinonia promotes Christian values

By NICOLE DAVISON
STAFF WRITER

The largest organization on campus is currently Koinonia, a Christian campus ministry.

It already has approximately 300 members with 130 members attending the weekly meetings.

David Weaver, campus minister with Koinonia said, "We really haven't even got off the ground yet."

Students who are involved with the group list a variety of reasons they enjoy it.

Tron Peterson, a senior criminal justice major, said the group helps him to better understand the Bible and apply it to his life. He also has another reason for liking the group. He met his wife there.

Margaret Becker, a freshman vocal music major who came to Missouri Southern this summer, said, "Koinonia really helped me meet the people I wanted to meet."

She said after attending the first meeting, she had met about 50 people. Weaver said a big reason students enjoy Koinonia is because they have fun. He said it is just not true that Christians do not have fun.

"You can be a Christian and have a good time," he said. "If that wasn't true, you wouldn't see the numbers in our group."

Koinonia holds their regular meetings at 7 p.m. every Tuesday in the Fellowship Hall of College Heights Christian Church. Members sing, perform skits, make new friends, and learn things that they can apply to their day-to-day life. Weaver thinks the philosophy of the group is more teaching than preaching.

"They wouldn't come back if it was any other way," he said. The group also meets from 11 a.m.-1 p.m. every Thursday in the basement of Resident Apartment B for a lunch by area churches. At that group tries to plan activities every weekend.

The group's annual kick-off event will be held Oct. 1 in the Connor Ballroom of the Billingsly Student Center. All students, faculty, and friends are invited to find out more about Koinonia.

Weaver encourages everyone to give the group a try.

"You're not going to find Jesus crammed down your throat," he said.

Weaver said many times at college, students attend church for the wrong reasons. Now that they are in college, he said, looking for something real. Reason students keep coming to meetings is because what is real.

MISSOURI SOUTHERN FILM SOCIETY

Society to show classic western

'Stagecoach' opens season
of artistic films

By JENNIFER SEXTON
STAFF WRITER

For three decades, the Missouri Southern Film Society has presented a variety of international films. This year is no exception.

"I'm really excited," said Harrison Kash, assistant professor of physical science. "Many films we show, there is no other opportunity to see. They're not on video and I don't know if they will ever be. We offer something that is simply not available any other way."

"If we show the same as the local movie theater, there would be no reason for existing."

These international films are selected on the basis of their artistic merit, Kash said, and although some are unknown to the public, they have received critical acclaim.

"Some of the films represent other films something has been written about," he said. "Critics have applauded them and film festivals have shown them. They have received numerous awards. Some are out of the mainstream; no one knows about [them]. We find some treasures that no one knew existed."

The Missouri Southern Film Society consists of Dr. Elliott Denniston, Dr. Bill Tannenbaum, Dr. Joy Dworkin, Dr. Paul Teverow, Gaye Pate, Larry Meacham, Bill Livingston, Dr. Harry Preble, Dr. Doris Walters, Dr. Harold Bodon, Richard Massa and Harrison Kash.

"We've been discovering films for a long time," Kash said. "Last year we showed a Hungarian film no one had heard about. It was not released from New York City, maybe not even North America. It was a real treasure. There is no way it could be seen without a film festival."

"Sometimes these things are lost forever. [the film festival] saves a trip to Paris or London. Some films there is no way of seeing unless you go to a big archive in Paris, London or New York. It is a way to see things [that] there is no other way to get in this area at all."

John Ford's western film Stagecoach will be shown at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 29 in the Connor Ballroom of the Billingsly Student Center. It is the first program of the 31st anniversary season of the International Film Festival.

Stagecoach is the film that catapulted John Wayne into stardom after a career in B-pictures and re-established John Ford in the western genre, Kash said. Wayne is the outlaw Ringo Kid, one of nine assorted strangers beginning a dangerous-filled and dramatic journey in Lordsburg, New Mexico. Each member of the party reveals his true nature in a showdown.

"I haven't seen it [Stagecoach] for a long time, so I really don't remember it," Kash said. "John Ford is a great director."

Stagecoach was the first film Ford made in Monument Valley, Ariz., the location for eight of his subsequent Westerns. Based on an Ernest Haycox short story with a screenplay by Dudley Nichols, Kash said Stagecoach includes characters such as Claire Trevor's prostitute, John Carradine's southern gambler, and Thomas Mitchell's doctor. Highlighting the film is a race across the desert.

Many other films, including The Sheep Has Five Legs, Diary of a Lost Girl, The Organizer, The Go-Between, The Late Matthew Pascal, The Extraordinary Adventures of Mr. West in the Land of the Bolsheviks, Cassandra Cat, Make Mine Mink and Port of Call, will be shown in the Connor Ballroom of the Billingsly Student Center.

Season tickets for the 10-program series are available for $7 per adult and $5 per senior citizen (over 60) or student.

For more information persons may call 625-9614 or Ext. 614 on campus.

SOUTHERN THEATRE

Cast for 'sentimental' musical to be announced tomorrow

Children's production to focus on plight of Dogs

By P.J. GRAHAM

ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Casting for the upcoming Missouri Southern Theatre children's production, Dogs, will be announced tomorrow.

The play, which director Gerrie-Ellen Johnston refers to as a "sentimental" musical, is slated for Dec. 1, 2, 3, and 4 with matinee performances on Dec. 5 and 6.

"It is not what I would call an action play," she said. "It's also a story about hope and loving one another."

The story focuses on a group of dogs in an animal shelter. If not adopted, the dogs will be put to sleep.

Also involved is Angel, who can communicate with animals.

All Johnston, instructor of theatre, said about the ending was it is not a tragic ending.

"Children do need a happy ending," she said.

Johnston said some of the actors feel they may not be able to sing or dance well enough to work in a musical, but she said this is not necessarily the case.

"There are places for people who do sing and dance," she said.

"There are also places for people who can't sing and dance."

Johnston said acting ability also is important for children's productions.

"You have to be very honest in your acting with children," she said. "If you're talking about a rock, you'd better have a rock there."

"But they (children) are a good audience."

Aside from helping student actors to expand their acting skills, Johnston believes children's plays are important to the theatre department for other reasons.

While monies made from all other Southern productions go back to the general fund, any money made from the children's shows is used for scholarships in the department.

Johnston will direct, choreograph and be the vocal director for Dogs and Brett McDowell, senior speech and drama secondary education major, will be the stage manager.

"Usually, Dr. [Jay] Fields [theatre department head] and I do these ratings for new tobacco taxes as high as 84 percent, and always well above 50 percent, making these taxes unusually politically acceptable.

The cost of smoking to state governments in the United States in 1985, the most recent year for which data has been calculated, was more than $52 billion, or $221 per person, according to the CDC.

The draft of another study, by the U.S. Office of Technology Assessment, put the total cost of smoking-related health care and lost productivity in the United States at $65 billion a year, or $217 per pack.

Those amounts do not include the non-economic values attributable to loss of life. If the disruption of families and tragedy of unnecessary death due to smoking-related illnesses could somehow be added into the calculations, along with the lost skills and contributions to communities of those who died, then the measured costs would be much higher.

New squad members eye initial collegiate competition

By HONEY SCOTT

STAFF WRITER

As their first tournament nears, the forensics squad is coming together, and under their new director, Eric Morris, the squad is optimistic.

"Things are going very well," said John Kerney, junior accounting major. "We're all looking forward to the tournament."

"We feel very confident about it," said Kim Lawry, sophomore history major. "I feel we were just getting competitive at the end of last year."

"We feel that we are going to pick up where we left off."

The squad will be traveling this weekend to Johnson County Community College in Kansas City, Kan., for their first competition.

Last year's debate squad will be joined by two new members, Kacy Carver, freshman accounting major, and Greg Autry, freshman political science major. Carver and Autry will be working together in the "two-man" competition of debate. Carver is a graduate of Diamond High School, where she debated for three years.

"I'm looking forward to college debate," Carver said.

Returning debaters from last year include Steven Douthledge, junior communications major; Paul Hood, senior English major; Phillip Samuels, sophomore secondary education major; and Alecia Ward, senior political science major. Ward will compete only on a limited basis. Lawry, a familiar member of the forensics squad, will be debating as well as competing in individual events.

The individual events squad has four returning members, including Kerney, Curt Gilstrap, sophomore marketing major, Nick Hayes, sophomore undecided major, and Lawry. Renee Heidrich, freshman education major will be the new addition to the squad.

Gilstrap will be performing duet, dramatic interpretation, poetry and impromptu speaking.

In addition to the duet with Gilstrap, Hayes will be doing prose. Heidrich will be taking programmed oral interpretation and prose. Kerney will be performing a duet with Lawry, poetry, prose, and programmed oral interpretation.

Ashcroft honors literacy program

Crowder College cited for STRIDE program's success

By TODD G. HIGDON
STAFF WRITER

Illiteracy is a growing problem in the United States, but Crowder College in Neosho is doing something about it.

Success Through Reading Improvement and Development (STRIDE) was started at Crowder College in 1986.

The program has grown rapidly since it began serving the people of Newton and McDonald Counties.

STRIDE tutors assist high school drop-outs and disabled adults who cannot read or write.

"We have about a 18 percent functional literacy rate in these two counties," said Pam Hudson, director of student advancement at Crowder College, which operates the STRIDE program.

"The biggest success of STRIDE is definitely the volunteer tutors," she said.

At this point, the program has trained over 500 people in Newton and McDonald counties.

"Right now, we have about 200 tutors helping 250 students," Hudson said. "An interested person can enroll in a workshop or a credit class, and our trainers will do the rest."

The workshop is a non-credit course available to those who want to be tutors and is offered free of charge.

"The program is government-funded," Hudson said. "It's funded by the Commission on National Community Service. Also, Southwestern Bell helps us by giving us a grant each year."

On Tuesday, about 150 people attended an hour-long award ceremony to recognize the tutors.

Governor John Ashcroft spoke at the new LOC/STRIDE open house on Sunday, then handed out certificates to STRIDE tutors.

"My real reason for being here is to say thank you (volunteers)," Ashcroft said. "Crowder College may be small in number compared to the universities, but there is no question that it is a state and national leader when it comes to innovation, industry, or service."

Business Weekly reported that American high schools graduate 700,000 functionally illiterate people each year.

"Fortunately, innovative programs such as STRIDE prove that it's not too late to reverse trends in our country," Ashcroft said.

"The STRIDE program works not because of experts or professional administrators, but because of ordinary citizens that care enough to devote their time and energy to help others learn to read."

Peggy Yeiser, a STRIDE tutor, is a citizen involved with the program.

"When I was in college back in the '50s, I became totally infatuated with the whole idea of teaching adults to read," she said.

"You are never too old or too young to learn," Ashcroft said. "You are never too old or too young to help someone."

Other literacy programs are Joplin Neighborhood Adult Literacy Action (NALA) and Eastern Jasper County Laubach Literacy.

Council approves ordinance for new flag

By LEANN MOORE
CHART REPORTER

After 120 years without one, Joplin now has an official city flag.

Mike Hartley, engineering technician in the public works department, designed the new city flag. It displays the state of Missouri in red on a royal blue background. Two stripes in the upper right-hand corner contain 24 stars, representing Missouri as the 24th state admitted to the United States. A white star is in the Southwest corner of the state representing Joplin's location.

The Joplin insignia is next to the star with the city's date of incorporation and city seal above the name. The motto below the state reads "Ad Omnia Parata," meaning "ready for all things."

The motto was selected by City Councilman Donald Clark, who initiated action to develop the flag.

Clark said, "This gives the community the flag they haven't had in 120 years."

A previous flag was created in 1973 for the Joplin centennial, but the design was not carried out to be used for a city flag.

Warren Turner, Missouri Southern baseball team coach, was credited by Clark for helping in the flag's development. Turner made the suggestion for a flag after traveling to Montgomery, Ala., during the NCAA Division II College World Series and seeing that city's flag.

A 5-by-8 foot flag will hang in the city council chambers, and 4-by-6 foot flags will be offered to the public schools, and to institutions, for $100.

The initial cost for the design was $2,000. City officials hope to recoup those costs through the sale of flags, T-shirts and caps emblazoned with the flag's design. Items were offered for sale at a recent Joplin Fall Fiesta and an open house at the Joplin Regional Airport.

Linda Sharp, finance director of the city of Joplin, said 110 flags had been sold since last Thursday.

Automated weather station to improve forecasting, save money

By CHRIS BUNCH
STAFF WRITER

Technology cannot control the weather, but it can help to better predict it.

For that reason, the Joplin Regional Airport is getting an automated weather station, according to Steve Stockam, manager of the Joplin Airport.

"As technology improves, we need to keep moving forward," he said.

"If you can still maintain the level of service you've had and cut out some of the manpower, it will save the taxpayers money."

The ASOS (Automated Surface Observation System) planned for Joplin is one of only four automated weather stations coming to Missouri.

Under the current system, there is someone at the airport 24 hours a day updating the National Weather Service on current conditions and fronts moving in.

The new system will do exactly that, but will be completely automated.

One of the drawbacks of the new system is that it will not be able to spot weather fronts as they move into the area.

However, one pilot said the system will be able to predict fronts moving in by looking at current conditions such as temperature, wind, and cloud level.

James Black, the engineer working on the system for Joplin, said there are many benefits to the new technology.

"Ultimately, it will help expand coverage, save money, do it cheaper and better, faster and faster than what is out there now," Black said.

The system also will help pilots coming into the airport.

"It has the ability to send a computer generated voice to the pilots telling what the conditions are at that exact moment, with the visibility, winds, and cloud level. It also measures temperature, dew point, and sea level," Black said.

Currently there are 800 sites which report weather conditions to the National Weather Service.

When the ASOS systems are in place, the number of sites will increase to over 1,000 nationwide.

The system will keep its own records and act as a tool for meteorologists.

The National Weather Service can use all of these stations to make better judgments of the weather and to make more accurate forecasts.

As with any new technology, there is a chance for error.

Stockam said the manned station will remain operational for two years after the system's completion to help work out any problems.

Also, the Weather Service will conduct tests comparing the new system to what is available now before accepted.

"If the ASOS has a problem, the computer will call up a technician and pinpoint the problem, so it can be restored as quickly as possible," Black said.

A tentative starting date of October 1993, with completion scheduled for the summer of 1994.

The undersigned faculty members of Missouri Southern State College deplore the actions of Jasper County Sheriff's deputies and Missouri State Highway Patrol officers who restricted Missouri Southern students' freedom of speech and their right to peaceably assemble on public property. We affirm the right of our students to support political candidates of their choice, and to espouse existing laws as well as the right of petition any level of government for a redress of grievances, without the threat of arrest or verbal harassment. These rights, which establish the legitimacy of dissent, are the hallmark of American liberties and worthy of the sacrifices made by generations of Americans.

Furthermore, we uphold the mission of Missouri Southern State College to promote students' understanding of our nation's valuable cultural diversity; to develop students' critical thinking skills; and to assist students in acquiring civic, historical and value-oriented perspectives that will enhance appreciation of their heritage. We feel that it is the duty of the college faculty to provide an environment where a diverse range of ideas can be freely expressed, discussed and critically evaluated. We regret that this was not possible on September 11, 1992.

Lions lose third quarterback; face Mo. Western Saturday

By JEFFREY SLATTON
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

The uphill battle of the Lion football team continues to get steeper this week as they will face Missouri Western State College on Saturday, minus senior Rod Smith.

Smith was injured in last week's 10-7 loss to Central Missouri State University in Warrensburg when he was hit after calling for a fair catch on the games first punt.

"Rod worked all week at quarterback and never took a snap," said Head Coach Jon Lantz.

Lantz said Smith was out with torn ligaments and would miss the remainder of the season. Smith is the third Southern quarterback injured in three games. Senior Matt Cook broke his collarbone in the 59-7 victory over Cameron University September 5. Sophomore G. W. Posey left the September 12 game in the third quarter with a bruised sternum. The Lions went on to lose the game to Emporia State University, 28-7.

Lantz said it is not yet known if Smith will be allowed to medical red-shirt and return next year.

"Our athletic director, Jim Frazier, is still checking into that possibility," he said.

Posey returned from injury to throw for 127 yards on 10 completions.

"It's the second time (Posey) has had to come into a football game, not knowing if he was going to have to play," Lantz said. "He handled himself pretty well."

Lantz said other factors beside the injury could be blamed for the loss.

"We did not lose this football game because we lost Rod Smith," he said. "We lost the football game because we lost two fumbles on their 10-yard line."

The first fumble occurred seven minutes into the game when senior wide receiver Bill Moten lost the ball after a completion from Posey. Despite the fumble, Lantz found some positives in his team's opening drive.

"I thought we gained a lot of confidence," he said.

The second fumble also killed a long drive. The Lions took the second half kickoff and drove the ball 66 yards to the CMSU 9-yard line. Senior Karl Evans fumbled the ball after it was pitched from Posey and the Mules recovered.

"Not scoring on the first fumble didn't take that much out of us," Lantz said. "But, in the third quarter, it probably did."

CMSU scored the games first touchdown with 9:46 left in the second quarter. After stopping the Lions on four plays, quarterback Carl Lawrence completed a 33-yard pass to Vince Jordan on the

Rose, Riddle pace Southern in meet

Lions 7th, Lady Lions 4th in 'Stampede'

After losing a runner in Saturday's competition, the cross country Lions and Lady Lions will have a week off to practice for an upcoming meet.

Eddy Emery twisted his ankle in a hole during the first part of Saturday's race, the Jock's Nitch Southern Stampede.

"Eddy was our number four man and that's going to hurt us," said head coach Tom Rutledge. "He will probably be out of cross country [for the season]. He has a hair-line fracture."

"Injuries happen in athletics. That's the coach's biggest fear."

The team's third event of the season will be the Southwest Missouri State Invitational, slated at 10 a.m. Friday, Oct. 3, in Springfield.

"We're taking some time to practice because of this conference," Rutledge said. "The guys are improving and so are the girls, although we've got a long way to go."

Rutledge said his teams face a lot of Division I competition at meets, and he believes this element helps the runners to perform better.

"It raises your level of competition," he said. "You don't limit yourself. It's a challenge every week."

Last weekend's race offered such competition to the runners, Rutledge said. The Arkansas team, which finished first, is the top ranked team nationally, and two former Olympic Kenyan runners raced. Rutledge says he is pleased with how well the Southern Stampede race had developed.

"It's become one of the larger and premier meets because of the competition level," he said. "We have one of the best cross country courses in the country. The people want to come back."

Southern's Jason Riddle was an individual leader at the race, coming in 14th.

"Jason Riddle is the first two-time All-American we've produced," Rutledge said. "You don't find many Jason's in life. National champions are hard to find. He's looking stronger than ever."

Freshman Shelly Rose, also an individual leader, placed 11th in the women's race.

Rutledge noted the team did improve its pack time and runners improved their individual times. He remains positive about the cross country program at Southern.

"Hopefully, there will be a new sheriff in town," he said. "And hopefully, that sheriff will be us."

Lions hope home games cure for winless campaign

Using a nine-day mid-season break to regroup and reset, Coach George Greenlee says his soccer Lions are ready to resume their season.

"We had a strenuous workout on Monday, we worked on basics and conditioning," he said. "Tuesday we did some cross-training in the pool, and today (Wednesday) we had a full scrimmage to get us back into a game mode."

The Lions, 0-5, will face Southern Nazarene Friday at 4 p.m. On Tuesday, Southern hosts Oral Roberts University in a 3:30 p.m. contest.

Southern stunned the perennial NAIA powerhouse Southern Nazarene 5-4 last year.

"My student assistant, Bobby Nichols, tells me they are fast, they attack and cross the ball well, and they play a physical game," Greenlee said. "It will take everything we can muster to do what we have to do to win."

The extra practice time the schedule break provided, Greenlee said, has given the Lions an opportunity to work on what may be the team's Achilles heel—scoring.

"We feel the defense is where we want it," he said. "But we have absolutely got to have some offense."

"We will try to create more shots on goal and scoring opportunities," Greenlee said patience and

Non-revenue athletics deserve fan attention

Southern sports are hypocrites.

Sure, they are good game, but how many of them actually attend the tests played by non-revenue sports?

When someone criticizes the athletic department's legions of "fans" cry a but how many of these fans actually make the to attend a softball (regular season, Dolence), a volleyball or—God forbid—a cross try meet?

Coach says 'no names' in MIAA season

After posting a 21-8 record a year ago, Head basketball Coach Robert Corn has three players he hopes can provide immediate help to an already strong team.

Drum, 6-7 1/2, 225 pounds, a true freshman," Corn said. "I signed him early and feel like going to be a very good addition to the team."

dropped Southern to 0-2 in the conference, 1-2 overall, last in the MIAA. They now move on to play MWSC at Hughes Stadium on Saturday. The Griffons are coming off a 35-30 loss to ESU. Western enters the contest with an identical 1-2 record overall and 0-1 mark in the MIAA. Lantz said playing in front of the home crowd could be the remedy his team needs.

business will only help the Lions. "When we gain possession on half of the field, we want to have two passes and score," he said. "I would like to see about four passes and a better set up. We are going to get our composure on the offensive end, now we need composure on our attack."

ic and will definitely help our guard situation."

"Dirk Price," We've known of Dirk for a long time, he's from Glenwood High School in Springfield and State Fair Community College," Corn said. "He's an excellent shooter and we look for big things from him."

Corn said one strength of this year's squad will be depth.

"I feel like we're going to be able to go 11 players deep," he said. "I think that because of the late starting practice date, depth will be a plus for us."

This year, teams are not allowed to begin practice until Nov. 1 under a new NCAA rule.

Corn said the MIAA conference should once again be one of the strongest in the country.

"Right now, I have no idea where we are going to be picked (in the preseason polls)," Corn said. "I guess it doesn't matter though because since I've been here we haven't finished where we've been predicted to."

Washburn, Missouri Western, Central Missouri St., and Missouri-Rolla should be the favorites heading into the season.

"You can go all the way down the list of teams in the conference and there really is no gimmes," Corn said.

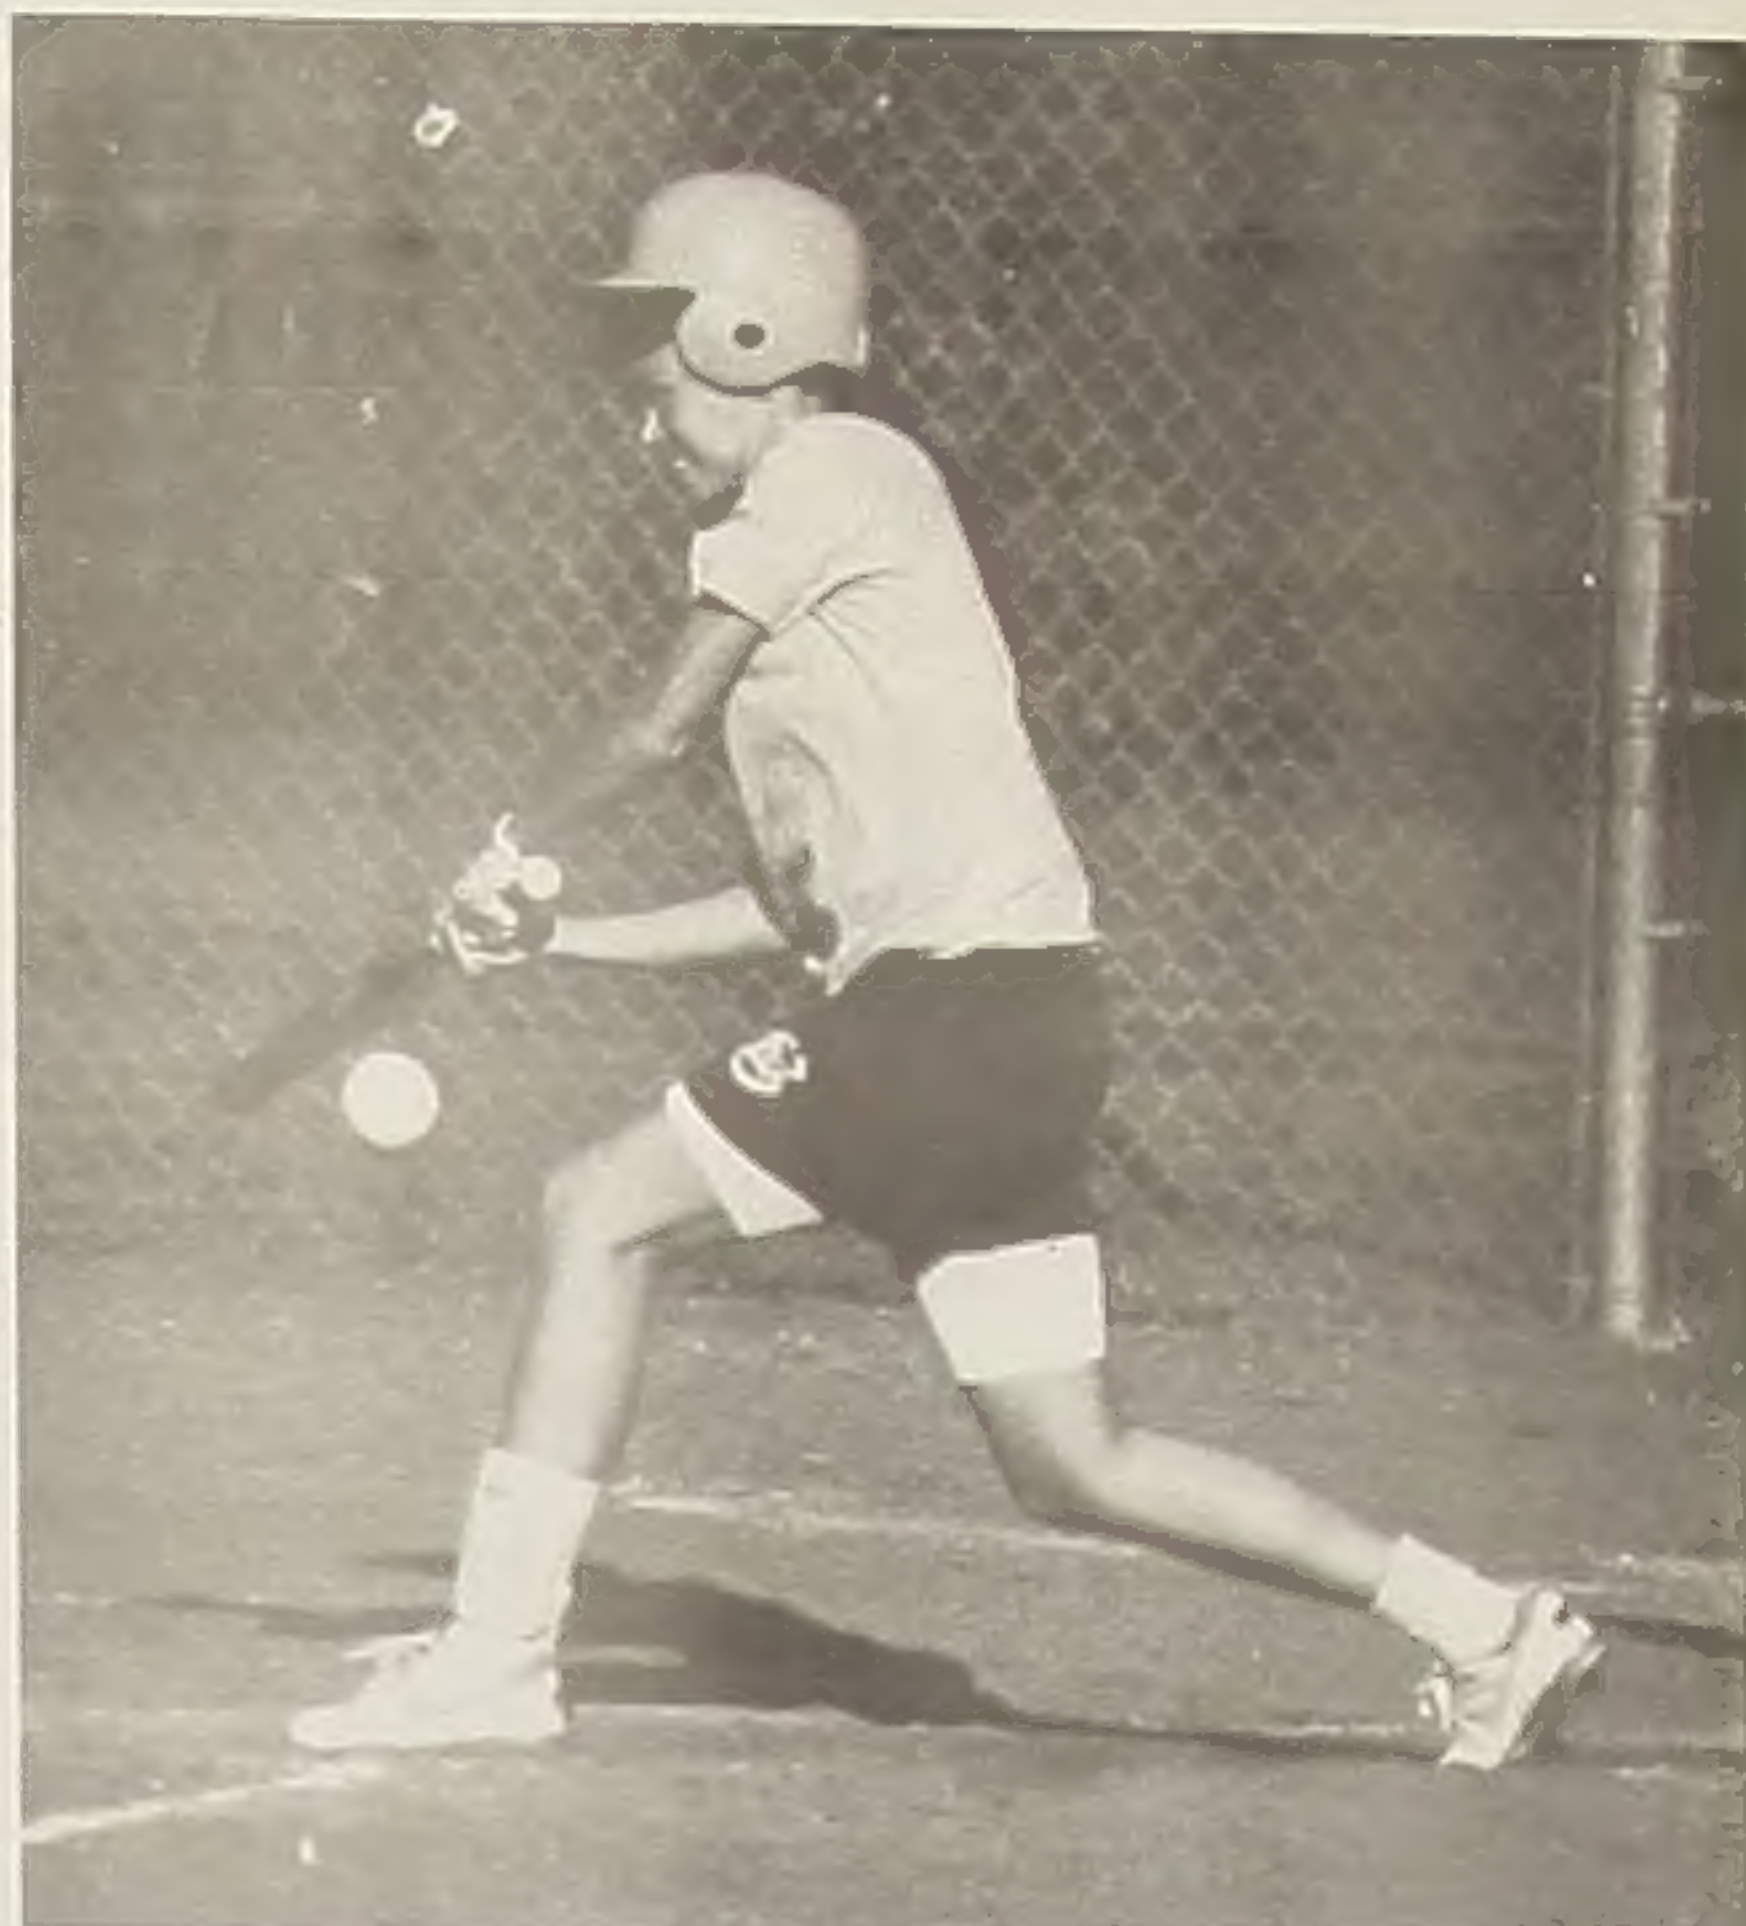

Despite the success of last year's team, Corn said the team did not reach the point where they wanted to be, the NCAA Division II tournament.

Practice for the Lions begins Nov. 1 with the annual "midnight madness" event at Young Gymnasium which is open to the public.

"We were really pleased with last year's event," Corn said. "We expect 500-to-600 people to be there."

Corn also said open tryouts will be held Nov. 5, from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. for those interested and eligible under NCAA standards.

graduating from high school to draw from and we had a record graduating class last year."

Leon said the decrease is actually smaller than it seems because most of the decline was in off-campus enrollment.

"We have 111 less students enrolled in those programs," Leon said. "We televise those courses to other communities, and there was some uncertainty about whether the facilities in Webster would be ready."

Leon said this freshman class is better prepared than past classes.

"The admissions standards are having some effect," he said. "The average ACT for this year's (freshman) class is 21.4, compared to 21.0 last year and the national average of 20.4."

The College began to implement more stringent admission requirements last year, but Leon said the move was not intended to limit enrollment.

"We have just entered a period where enrollment is declining," he said.

Show-Me Showdown

Some University of Arkansas students also travelled to Branson in a show of support for their home-state candidate, Gov. Bill Clinton.

► THE '92 VOTE

Close election in November places Missouri in the political spotlight

By JOHN HACKER
MANAGING EDITOR

President George Bush's visit to Missouri Southern and Joplin reinforces what political observers have said throughout this election: Missouri is an important swing state in this year's presidential race.

Already Democratic candidate Bill Clinton has been in the state three times since the Democratic Convention.

Republican candidate Bush was in Springfield Tuesday. This means the president has visited Missouri four times since his party's convention, including three visits to southwest Missouri.

Congressman Mel Hancock (R-Missouri) said Missouri has a reputation as a "bellwether state" in national elections.

"Missouri has consistently voted for whoever has won in a presidential election," Hancock said. "Some states can vote either way but Missouri has been pretty consistent."

Michael Yates, associate professor of political science at Missouri Southern, said statistics back up that reputation.

"Since 1900, Missouri has voted for the ultimate winner in every presidential election except one," Yates said.

"Missouri went for Adlai Stevenson in 1956 when Dwight Eisenhower won."

This trend has held not just in the landslide victories of the Reagan years but in some of the closer elections. Yates cited such close elections as 1948 when Harry Truman squeaked by Thomas Dewey, 1960 when John Kennedy defeated Richard Nixon, Nixon's victory over Barry Goldwater in 1968, and Jimmy Carter's win over Gerald Ford in 1976.

"In each of those elections Missouri's electoral votes did make a difference," Yates said.

Missouri has 11 votes in the Electoral College, which actually chooses the president.

The number of votes each state is allotted in the Electoral College is equal to the number of members of the Senate added to the number of members of the House of Representatives.

There are 538 votes in the Electoral College, and 270 are needed to win the election.

Yates said Missouri will probably see more of the candidates, especially in a close election.

"Two or three states will be very important for getting to that magic 270 number," Yates said.

Gary Edwards, executive director of the Missouri Democratic Committee, said it's not the number of electoral votes that makes Missouri important.

"Texas and California have more electoral votes," he said. "Missouri is centrally located and is so close to Arkansas makes sense that Governor Clinton would want to do well in Missouri."

I would expect both candidates to spend a lot of time here," Edwards said. Clinton mentioned to have a strong Missouri.

"Bush stands for very improvement in this election," said. "Clinton has a step plan to improve things."

Hancock said for Bush to be "completely honest with the American people."

"Straight-forward honesty not playing politics is what the people in Missouri want," he said.

"I know that's what I've tried to do."

Crowds gather to wave at the presidential motorcade as it leaves Silver Dollar City. Nearly 10,000 people turned out to see the President in Branson.

President and Mrs. Bush wave to a small crowd of reporters and wishers at Springfield Regional Airport before departing for St. Louis.
